A 35-week stint every Monday night at Madame Wong's club led to Capitol Records financing the demo which turned into the Burning Sensations mini-album, produced by McGovern with former Talking Heads engineer David Jerden. (This team also worked together on the new album.) "Belly Of The Whale" blasted into the dance clubs and onto the playlists of radio stations across the country, and was soon made into a video clip that was an instant hit on MTV. Burning Sensations went on the road, opening several dates on the Roxy Music tour and headlining their own concerts in California, including a sold-out show at the 2,500-seat Palace Theater in L.A.

The last few months have been a whirlwind for the Burning Sensations.
